May briefing

Behind the lines . . . Informed sources say it was the Washington-based American Security Council (ASC) which sponsored a quasi-clandestine visit of several South African military and intelligence officials here in mid-March. The ASC, made up of former senior U.S. military, diplomatic, and intelligence officials, such as former CIA chief of counterintelligence James Angleton, is also said to be financing Miami-originated radio propaganda against Cuba and a new machine gun factory in Guatemala. Retired General John Singlaub, who resigned from his command in protest over Carter Administration policies, is said to be the key ASC operative for Central America.
